SCHOOL OFFICERS HOLD MEETING

LISTEN TO TALK ON SCHOOL LAWS BY U. S. LASHER.

The Several School Districts Well Represented.

With the time divided between a discussion of the new school laws and suggestions for making the schools of this country more healthful, comfortable, attractive and efficient, school officers from nearly every district in the county enjoyed a profitable day Thursday at the court house. G. S. Lasher of the department of public instruction was present to conduct the sessions and he was kept busy with a rapid fire of questions which were answered in a clear concise manner. There was a keen interest displayed throughout, not only in the various legal problems which have to be faced by the school board but also in the possibilities of improving the physical condition of schools.

Some of the laws which went into effect August 14th are of minor importance but others are of general interest. Agriculture is now included in the teacher's examination. The board of supervisors must allow the traveling expenses of commissioners and examiners. Graded school district treasurers are given 30 days in which to file their bonds. Township boards must attach all unorganized territory to some school district or districts. As township boards can no longer remove school officers, the present attorney-general holds that members of the board may also serve as school officers. The library apportionment must be made by the county treasurers before August 1.

The qualifications of school officers are now the same in every district whether it is organized under a special act or the general laws, the only exception being in fourth class cities. That means that no person has a right to vote or participate in a school meeting unless he or she is a citizen of the United States, 21 years of age, a resident of the district at least three months preceding the election and either owns property which is assessed for school taxes or is the parent or legal guardian of a child on the census list. Only tax-paying electors can vote taxes. Women have absolutely equal suffrage with the men both as to voting and holding school offices.

In order to qualify for a school office a written acceptance together with an affidavit asserting the proper qualifications must be filed with the director within ten days. The affidavit must be taken before a notary public, justice of peace or the senior member of the board in point of service. The people at the annual meeting are expected to fix the salaries of the officers but the total amount must not exceed $25 when there are fewer than 50 children on the census and $50 when the number is between 50 and 100.

The new textbook law prohibits dealers from charging more than 15 per cent above the lowest wholesale price at which the books are sold anywhere in the United States, authorizes boards to employ an agent to handle the textbooks and sell them at not more than ten percent above the listed price, or to handle the books themselves, selling them at a price covering cost of handling. When a family moves from a district to some other district in the state, the treasurer of the first district must buy the text books in use by the members of the family at a fair price, based upon the condition of the books.

Township and school boards can buy only such books for their libraries as are listed by the state librarian and superintendent of public instruction. The free tuition law was amended so that the tuition must now be paid to any high school in the state, rather than merely to one of the three nearest high schools. A change in the compulsory school law requires those who passed the eighth grade before reaching their sixteenth birthday to remain in school or to be regularly employed at some lawful work if physically able to do so.

"Under the law," Mr. Lasher stated "practically the complete taxing powers rests with the school board. The people can vote money for only four purposes, a new school building or addition, a new site, school officers' salaries, and for more than $21 a year per pupil for high school tuition. The board votes the taxes for all other purposes so if the school house in your district is not as healthful, comfortable or attractive as it should be, the school board is responsible and no one else as the board has complete authority to install a heating plant and ventilating system, paint the school house, grade the school grounds, remodel the interior, put in new seats and desks, a new floor, a sanitary drinking fountain, buy books for library use, pictures on the wall, or add any desired equipment for the school room, all of this without a vote of the people. In fact the people have no business to vote on these questions as that power rests entirely with the board. It is possible today to make a country school as satisfactory in every way as a city. There are available suitable systems that thoroughly ventilate school room and heat it evenly as well; drinking fountains that cost as low as $13.25 which do away with the use of drinking cups; indoor chemical closets which eliminate the outdoor outhouses which ever is a menace to health and morals; seats and desks which can be fitted to the individual boy or girl, they are adjustable; paper towels that take the place of that cause of skin disease epidemics and sometimes of blindness, the roller towel. The only way to safeguard children from defective eyesight is to have the windows of the school house entirely on the left side of the pupils but conditions can be vastly improved by using translucent shades and installing them at the bottom of the window sash so that they may be pulled up rather than down.

"The most important thing in the education of a child is health and until greater care is taken to have the conditions in the school room sanitary and hygienic, the boys and girls of this country are doomed to suffer physically as a cost of securing an education.

Letter From Henry Stephens.

Ye Editor of the Avalanche is in receipt of a letter from Henry Stephens, in which Mr. Stephens makes some friendly criticisms of an article recently published in this paper. If we were wrong we are glad to be corrected. Mr. Stephens has made a comparison of the individual players on the team, and we are sure that our readers will find his statements of considerable interest. We are taking the liberty of publishing his letter in full.

Waters, Mich., Oct. 21, 1913.
Mr. O. P. Schumann,
Grayling, Mich.

Dear Mr. Schumann:
I am writing to ask you to send me six copies of the Avalanche Oct. 9th and please send in bill. Under the heading "local news" there was an article that amused me, that of Hawk Hanson receiving a floral wreath draped with crape.

I plead "not guilty" altho you gave me the benefit of being its sender. If you start to reason it out, you will perceive that it was incredible that I could make the mistake of signing it "W. T. C. U." since my connection with W. C. T. U. is so strong that I could scarcely forget its initials.

The winding up in the article in which you say that "Mr. Stephens ought to feel pretty good when they (Otsego) defeated a team better than theirs. It was all base ball luck and every player on the Otsego team knows it," bears criticism.

Taking player for player individually, Grayling had four better players than Otsego and Otsego had four better players than Grayling. While Wagner Grayling fields his position better than Gurney, Otsego, the latter is a better hitter, hence a toss up.

Dubue p, Grayling, better than Bell, Otsego.

Bowerman, c Otsego, better than Payne, Grayling.

Killian 1st b, Otsego better than Johnson, Grayling.

Wagner and Gurney, 2nd b, a toss up.

Fabrique s, s, Grayling, better than Hadley, Otsego.

Bates 3rd b, Grayling, better than Wright, Otsego.

Cocash 1st, Otsego, better than Bramble, Grayling.

Letkush c f, Grayling, better than McDonnell, Otsego.

Prough r f, Otsego, better than Zamlock, Grayling.

As to the base ball luck, I don't see why it was any luck at all. I consider it better playing. You will realize it the same way I do, if you will take time to reason it out.

Next year the Otsego enter the Michigan State league with headquarters at Gaylord; have got the franchise already. Holland and Louia are putting in bids for the 8th team.

Yours very truly,
HENRY STEPHENS.

The Youth's Companion in 1911. Seven college presidents and a number of college instructors, including ex-President Taft, will contribute to the Youth's Companion during 1914. Then there is Gene Stratton Porter, whose stories of Indiana woods and swamps have made her famous, and Kate Douglas Wiggin, who never wrote a dull line in her life, and Mrs. Burton Harrison, who remembers when conversation was really an art as practiced in Washington and in the manor houses of Virginia. And this is just a beginning of the list.

If you know The Companion you have a pretty fair idea as to what is in store for the next year's readers. If you do not know, ask us to send you sample copies. For instance, those containing the opening chapters of Auther Stanwood, Dick's true serial "His Father's Son." Full announcement for 1914 will be sent with the sample copies.

For the year's subscription of $2.00 there is included The Companion Practical home calendar for 1914, and all the issues of the paper for the remaining weeks of 1913, dating from the time the subscription is received.

Mercy Hospital Tag Day.

The Sisters of Mercy wish to express to the ladies of Grayling their sincere thanks and gratitude for their great success in their efforts to extend their aid to the Grayling Mercy hospital on Saturday last. Only the kindest and warmest feeling toward the institute could have caused this united effort of all the people.

The Sisters not only appreciate being the recipient of the very substantial gift of $475.00 but the friendly spirit that is manifested by the people of Grayling, as also, the villages of Waters, Gaylord and Roscommon.

May God bless the work of each individual who has sacrificed their mite to help maintain the hospital in their midst.

Many there are who would gladly care for a homeless, sick person had they the facilities wherewith to do it. There is always a place in an institution of this kind where charitably disposed people, who have abundantly received and possess this world's goods can and do offer great help.

Again may God bless each in their temporal affairs and their efforts in the great struggle to reach their eternal home.

Sincerely and gratefully,
SISTERS OF MERCY.

We have just received a nice assortment of

Mr. Hawley Geister died at his home in Alger, October 10th, at the age of 20 years. Mr. Geister was at one time a resident of Grayling, and a brother of Mrs. Clarence Van Amburg of this city. His friends of this city will be sorry to hear of his sad death.

The annual meeting of the board of supervisors has close after days of hard work. Prior to the convening of the board, County Clerk Niederer had compiled a routine of the work that was to be performed at this annual meeting. Every detail that was to be looked after had been carefully tabulated in such a manner that it would make the work of the board simple and still nothing be overlooked. All the work could be taken up in the regular routine and, in most instances, finished. This has saved a lot of valuable time for the supervisors and also insured that nothing was forgotten besides saving the taxpayers a nice sum of money, and that is what we all like.

A quiet but very pretty home wedding took place last week at 19 Annapolis street, Battle Creek, when Miss Gertrude Giddings and Arthur Hennessy, both of Battle Creek, were joined in wedlock by Rev. Charles Nease, pastor of the Upton avenue M. E. church. Only the immediate relatives witnessed the ceremony. Mr. and Mrs. Fred Hennessy attended the couple. Mr. Hennessy being a brother of the groom. The home was adorned with cut roses and soon after the ceremony ice cream and cake served. Mr. and Mrs. Hennessy will make their home at the above number where they will be pleased to receive their friends. Arthur Hennessy is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Hennessy, formerly of Maple Forest in his county.

He leaves to mourn him, his wife and three small children, Ralph, 10 years, Ruth, 4, Gladys, 3, and his mother of Iowa, all of whom have the sincere sympathy of their neighbors and friends. The funeral will be held tomorrow, Friday, from the home, at 2 o'clock, and interment will be in Elmwood cemetery. Rev. V. J. Hutton conducting the services. Mr. and Mrs. R. B. Cameron of Houghton, Mich., are visiting at the home of Mr. Cameron's sister, Mrs. Chas. McCullough. Mr. Cameron has been quite ill while here but is recovering.

The W. R. C. ladies spent yesterday at the Feldhauser farm. They went out for their annual dinner as they have done for several years before and always receive a hearty greeting and a good dinner.

Mrs. Godfrey Jorgenson returned from an extended visit at the home of her daughter in Iowa, on Wednesday. She says that she left Iowa on Monday and that they were having a heavy snow storm at the time. Also that all along the route they had snows and storms, and expected to find Grayling knee deep, instead she found no snow at all and that we were having fine weather.

Mrs. Weldon H. Warren and little daughter, Margaret Janie, who have been visiting her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Tromble for the past three months, left on Wednesday of last week for their home in Skagway, Alaska. Mrs. Warren will visit her brother, Frank Tromble in Hoquiam, Wash., on her way home and will also spend a few days with her aunt, Mrs. H. G. Stevens in Seattle, Wash. She expects to be in her home in Skagway about November 1st.

The Junior box social at the opera house last Friday was a most decided success in every way. The social party opened with dancing. At about 10:00 o'clock boxes containing elaborate (?) lunches and belonging to the young ladies present, were auctioned off to the highest bidders, and were the cause of considerable merriment and goodly profit to the Juniors as many of the boxes brought from $1 to $1.75 each. After the luncheon had been enjoyed, dancing was resumed and lasted until about 1:00 o'clock. The class cleared $18 on the venture, besides adding to their popularity.

The only reason that this section of Michigan has not one million more people than it has today, is that it has been neglected, and its advantages have not been made known to the world. Thousands of homeseekers from the east and Europe have been lured to the west and the far north-west thru spacious advertising, passing right by northern Michigan, going farther only to fare worse. It is only within the last two or three years that the attention of home seekers has been directed to the northern portion of this state. The Northeastern Michigan Development association has accomplished a great work already in advertising the northern portion of the state, and substantial results are being realized.—BAY CITY TRIBUNE.

While going home to supper, last Saturday night, Mrs. M. Brenner fell on the rickety sidewalk on Spruce street, next to the Dr. Merriman property. As a consequence she is nursing a sprained knee and an injured right arm. The sidewalk is in a dilapidated condition and bears evidence of a feeble endeavor to keep in repair by patch work. The boards are loose and decayed and the walk is full of holes, and how the street commissioner and street committee came to overlook the necessity of a walk here would be hard to understand. Mrs. Brenner says that "the bad condition of the walk had been reported to the proper authorities in the spring." Grayling has a fine lot of cement sidewalk and cross walks as any town of its size in Michigan, and more new walks are being built every year. It has, we believe, been the policy of the village council to build walks whenever and wherever there have been signed petitions from property owners requesting the same. This has been the usual custom, and in this way the people have not been forced, at times to go into heavy expense when it may have been a burden. This certainly is commendable and no doubt appreciated by the people. In the case of which we have referred, there may be some good reason why this sidewalk was left in this apparently unsafe condition. It seems that it may have been better had the boards been taken up entirely and the ground left clear, rather than to have been allowed to get into the present condition.

Grayling Mercantile Company

The Quality Store

The first number on the entertainment course was given at the Temple theater last Monday evening, by the English Opera singers. The selections were taken from the operas, Bohemian Girl, Pinafore, El Trovatore and others, besides a number of old time song favorites were rendered. To say that the audience was pleased with the entertainment would be putting it mildly. There was a goodly lot of real vocal music and it left a feeling with the audience that will have a lasting memory of a most delightful evening. The Senior class, who have the management of the course, made no mistake in selecting this company. This one attraction was worth the price of the complete course, and there are still four more entertainments to come. At present the company has two substitutes in the way of soprano and pianist. They expect the regular members, Miss Charlotte Simpson, soprano and Miss Edith Adams, pianist to be again in their places with the company next week. The company left here for Newberry, where they were engaged for last evening. We believe that the entertainment committee of next year would do well to add this company to its list of attractions. The next number will be by the "Metropolitan Musical Club" and consists of vocal and instrumental music. This will be on Thursday evening, November 27th.

SOLDIERS DIE IN RAIL ROAD WRECK

ENGINE TENDER JUMPS TRACK AND THREE COACHES PLUNGE TWENTY-FIVE FEET.

MEMBERS OF COMPANIES 29 AND 170 COAST ARTILLERY KILLED.

Terrible Loss of Life When Train On Which United States Regulars Travel to State Fair Is Derailed.

Meridan, Miss.—Twenty soldiers of Companies 39 and 170, United States coast artillery, were killed and about one hundred others injured Sunday afternoon when special troop train on the Mobile & Ohio railroad crashed through a trestle near State Line, Miss. Division Supt. Pigford, of the Mobile & Ohio, in a report sent to headquarters of the road at Mobile, gives this number as the extent of the casualties.

The wreck was caused by the engine tender jumping the track when about 200 feet from a trestle. The engine was not derailed and passed over the trestle. The tender broke loose from the engine, however, and with the baggage car and three coaches, plunged 25 feet to the ground.

Some of the dead are: Joseph Teben, Ernest Parquette, Clyde Teel, H. B. Bishop, G. C. Burleson, Joseph Provance, W. H. Brin, Gooden, Remsen, Gruckle Acres. Capt. Johnson, of Eighth Regiment band.

One hundred and seventy-nine soldiers were on the special train. They were from Fort Morgan and Fort Parancas, and were on their way to Meridan to participate in the Mississippi-Alabama joint state fair.

The coaches were well filled and when the three cars plunged through the trestle the men had little chance to escape. The dead and injured were mangled in a twisted mass of wreckage, making it difficult to remove dead bodies or rescue injured.

Huerta Will Not Resign. Mexico City—Provisional President Huerta has not resigned, nor has he fled from the capitol. When seen at the national palace at 5 o'clock Saturday afternoon he said he had no intention of doing either.

"When I resign," said Gen. Huerta "it will be to seek a resting place six feet in the soil. When I see the capitol it will be to shoulder a rifle and take my place in the ranks to fight the rebels."

This was his answer to queries as to whether there was any foundation for the reports which have freely circulated in the capitol and found their way to the United States.

Missouri Is Getting Rich. Jefferson City, Mo.—The state board of equalization fixed the valuation of property in Missouri at $1,758,000,000. This is an increase of $20,000,000 over the property assessment of last year.

Railroads and other public utilities are valued at $188,700,000, and increase of nearly $5,000,000. Nearly half the increase in valuation of real and personal property fell on Kansas City and St. Louis.

Last Officer of Light Brigade. London—The death Friday of Sir George Orby Wombell removes the last of the heroic officers who led the desperate charge of the Light Brigade at Balaklava, the most famous of modern English feats of arms, and relates to the pages of history, without a living link to the present, that splendid and useless sacrifice.

SULZER GIVEN LOVING CUP

Crowd of Admirers Call On Deposed Governor and Give Expressions of Confidence.

Albany, N. Y.—There was red fire, oratory and music by a brass band over at the executive mansion Saturday night when fifteen hundred admirers of William Sulzer called to present him with a loving cup.

A driving rain fell while the marchers were en route to the mansion. Sulzer started to shake hands with all of his callers, but he never completed the task. They crowded around him and refused to move. Some one said a few words of consolation to him only to be interrupted by Mrs. Sulzer.

"The action of the court is the least of our troubles," she said. The crowd began to cheer. "We'll have you back here next year, Bill!" one man yelled.

Chester C. Platt, Sulzer's secretary, read a speech assuring Sulzer that he had been removed because he would not obey the bosses. Mention of the name of Charles F. Murphy brought blisses. "Lynch him," shouted one man, at the mention of the name of an assemblyman. The cup presented to Sulzer was inscribed, "To William Sulzer. A victim of corrupt bossism, October 17, 1913."

Mrs. Sulzer was presented with a bouquet.

Redman Law Nearly Killed.

MRS. PANKHURST ADMITTED TO U. S.

RULING OF ELLIS ISLAND IMMIGRATION OFFICIALS REVERSED.

PRESIDENT WILSON TAKES AN INTEREST IN CASE.

Noted Militant Leader Allowed to Enter for Lecture Tour Without a Bond and On Her Own Recognizance.

Washington—Mrs. Emmeline Pankhurst, the militant British suffragette, who arrived in New York last Saturday for a lecture tour in the United States, and whose deportation was ordered by the Ellis Island Board of Immigration, was admitted to the country.

The order of deportation was reversed Monday after President Wilson had conferred on the celebrated case with Secretary Wilson and a hearing had been concluded before Immigration Commissioner Caminetti.

Secretary Wilson announced at the conclusion of his conference with the president that Mrs. Pankhurst would be admitted on her own recognizance, with the understanding that she would depart at the end of her lecture engagements. No bond was exacted.

Secretary Wilson declared that he and the president had discussed the question briefly. "We agreed," he said, "that Mrs. Pankhurst should be admitted on her own recognizance. My own reason is, and the president feels likewise, that there is naturally an element of doubt as to whether her acts constituted moral turpitude or were political in character."

The decision by the president and Secretary Wilson was communicated to Commissioner-General Caminetti, who issued the formal order of release.

President Wilson felt that the law had a flexible interpretation, so that it was largely a question of policy.

Commissioner Caminetti's decision was in strict accordance with the views of President Wilson and the secretary of labor.

There was no demonstration at the immigration bureau when the decision was announced.

Senate Passes Clapp Bill.

Washington—The first direct results of the congressional investigation of campaign expenditures came when the senate passed Senator Clapp's bill prohibiting the sending of campaign funds from one state to another.

The bill prohibits the carrying or sending of funds from one state to another, to be used in the election of president, vice president, presidential electors, or congressmen. The senate passed the bill without debate. In previous discussions it was made clear that its purpose was to prevent the financing of campaigns in a secret manner by organizations or individuals who did not come directly under the campaign publicity laws.

Last Zulu King Is Dead.

Cape Town—Dinuzulu, the last of the warrior kings of the former Zulu nation of South Africa, is dead.

He was a son of Cetwayo, the king who led the Zulu nation against the British troops in the war of 1879. Cetwayo was eventually defeated after he had inflicted a crushing blow on the British army at the battle of Isandhlwana, when practically the entire Twenty-fourth infantry regiment was massacred.

Dinuzulu led two or three rebellions against the British. He was once captured and exiled to the island of St. Helena.

Prospects Bright for Currency Bill.

Washington—President Wilson has further cleared the path for currency reform in the senate through conferences opened with the republicans on the senate committee now in charge of the bill. As a result of a conference with Senator Nelson, the president has received assurances that the republican members are not holding up legislation, nor trying to impede action on the currency bill in the senate. It is believed that it will not be made a party measure and will be supported by republicans and democrats alike.

In appreciation of his "Dominion of Harlem," a book that deals with people and conditions among the Hollanders and their descendants in western Michigan, the Knickerbocker society, of Grand Rapids, has elected Arnold Mulder, the author, an honorary member.

The state fire marshal is sued again. This time an Escanaba theatre owner seeks an injunction to restrain the marshal from enforcing that part of the state law which says no moving picture show shall be operated on the second floor of a building. This makes a half dozen suits the department is facing as a result of new legislation passed by the 1913 legislature.

The valuation of Albion was raised over $2,000,000 by the state tax commission, in the recent re-assessment, according to figures given out by the board of supervisors of Calhoun county. The old valuation was $2,045,420, while the new is $4,248,730.

LETTER FROM THE STATE CAPITOL

DOPE SELLING IN MICHIGAN DISCUSSED BY STATE OFFICIALS.

EXTRA SESSION MAY BE ADVISABLE.

If Contentment of Detroit Prosecutor Is Correct Law Will Be Needed to Prevent Indiscriminate Traffic in Drugs.

[By Gurd M. Hayes.]

Governor Ferris—"Every law abiding citizen should join in campaign to exterminate illegal sale of drugs."

Attorney General Grant Fellows—"If special session is called an amendment to the law relative to the sale of 'dope' should be called to attention of the legislature."

Dairy and Food Commissioner James Helme—"The cocaine law should be amended to compel wholesalers to report monthly their sales of this drug to the dairy and food department."

State Bacteriologist M. L. Holm—"The time has come when it is necessary to enact legislation restricting the rights of the medical profession in the use of cocaine."

Dr. Bret Nottingham of the state medical board—"Licenses of physicians or pharmacists should be revoked upon conviction for selling or prescribing 'dope' illegally."

Lansing, Mich.—Aroused by the exposures of the illegal sale of "dope" in Detroit, Lansing and other cities, of Michigan, state officials are planning a crusade against the continuance of this practice, and if a special session of the legislature is called Governor Ferris will recommend a radical change in the present laws governing the sale of drugs.

It is the unanimous opinion of every state official who has studied the proposition that the present laws are not stringent enough to curb violations by unscrupulous physicians and druggists, and it is pointed out that there are many other defects which are in need of immediate remedy. To such an extent has the traffic in drugs, especially heroin, grown, that state officials are horrified at the recent exposures. They do not hope to cure the unfortunate who are now addicted to the use of the death dealing drugs. Federal laws have now been enacted which will prevent "snow birds" outside the state from conducting a profitable business by peddling dope in Michigan, but they do hope to curb the sale in this state.

The recent disclosures in Detroit and elsewhere in Michigan indicate that the youth of the state, the manhood of Michigan, is being undermined through the unlawful sale of such drugs as morphine, heroin, etc.," said Governor Ferris.

"This phase of law violation should not be tolerated under any circumstances. There is absolutely no excuse for any man who claims to have the slightest regard for humanity to join in inflicting upon humanity drugs that are more destructive in their consequences than the leaden ball. The economic harm that is inflicted upon the state is a trifling factor as compared to the destruction of character. A secret and cowardly method that destroys life and character and imperils the safety of the people should receive more serious condemnation than the open methods of outlawry. Every law abiding citizen, every man who has an appreciation of the value of human life should join in a campaign to exterminate and make this form of drug violation an impossibility in the great state of Michigan. I deem it a privilege and a duty to do everything in my power to encourage law enforcement in relation to this all important matter. Along this line, the state of Michigan owes much to the splendid work of Dairy and Food Commissioner James Helme. It is hoped that our civil authorities will not leave a stone unturned to do away absolutely with this cowardly method of assassination."

Dairy and Food Commissioner Helme is not pleased at the methods followed by Prosecuting Attorney Shepherd in pushing the case against Alderman Eddie Barnett, of Detroit. "I am very sorry that the prosecution has taken the stand it has in the Barnett case," said Helme.

"I dug up the facts that a large amount of morphine and heroin had been sold without prescription in the Barnett Drug Store in Detroit. Section 9 of the pharmacy law provides that no registered pharmacist shall sell or furnish morphine or any of its derivatives without a physician's prescription. Barnett is not a registered pharmacist and the prosecutor took the ground that Barnett could therefore not be prosecuted for the sales of heroin made in his drug store."

"If the contention of the prosecutor is correct, then anyone except a registered pharmacist can sell morphine or heroin. The grocer, the butcher, the pop corn man or the newsboy is free to openly peddle and sell these drugs without restraint. If such is the law, the sooner a special session is called to correct this defect, the better. The unrestricted sale of morphine and heroin for the next 18 months in Michigan will do ten times as much damage as the cost of a special session. I do not believe this."

During the month of September 21 fatal accidents were reported to the industrial accident board, while 239 of the accidents reported were of a non-fatal nature. There were five fatal accidents in the transportation business, the automobile industry reported two fatalities, two were reported from the mining industry, four from the lumbering industry, four from the manufacturing industry, and public utilities reported one each.

however, is the law. While section 9 prohibits registered pharmacists from selling morphine only on prescription, section 32 reads "any person violating any of the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and on conviction shall be punished by a fine, etc." I believe any way that Barnett should have been prosecuted under sections 9 and 32.

"Instead of this Barnett is charged, as I understand it, with running a drug store without being a registered pharmacist. To my mind he cannot be convicted, as charged in the face of the plain provision of the provision in section 15 which reads 'provided this section and the preceding section shall not be construed as precluding any person from owning a drug store or pharmacy, if all the pharmacological work in the same drug store shall be under the personal supervision and direction of a registered pharmacist.'"

"As Barnett always employed a registered pharmacist, his conviction in the face of this provision will be exceedingly doubtful. At any event a test case should be brought at once to clear up this doubt and if it decided by the courts that the unrestricted sale of morphine and heroin by every person except pharmacists is legal in Michigan, a special session of the legislature cannot be called too soon."

"The law against the sale of cocaine in Michigan is working well. Under the law wholesalers must keep records of all sales to retailers and receipts for the drug delivered. These records are subject to the inspection of our department. Under this law the illegal sale of cocaine within the state has practically ceased and the cocaine fiends have taken to heroin."

"The cocaine law should be amended to compel wholesalers to report monthly their lists of sales to the dairy and food commissioner. "With such a record before me I could easily keep posted on all sales made to every druggist or other person in Michigan. If any appeared to be using an undue amount I could easily investigate and prosecute. If morphine, heroin, cocaine and all other habit forming drugs were also placed under the cocaine law, we would have habit forming drugs under strict control. Shipments from other states can only be controlled by federal law and a bill is now pending in congress to control such shipments."

"The traffic in certain drugs or their derivatives commonly referred to as 'dope' has reached such proportions and is so far reaching that possible results are appalling," said Attorney General Grant Fellows. "Medical experts give testimony that is not subject to question indicative of the degradation to which a strong man may be reduced from the effects of this practice. We have but to witness the terror, weakness and depravity of the victims, when within the protection of the law and when robbed of the opportunity of recourse to this drug, to appreciate the necessity for laws so stringent that the responsibility of contracting the habit may be reduced to the minimum."

"The penalty for the unnecessary and unwarranted sale of dope, either to fiends or those contracting the habit by so-called doctors, druggists and others is not in proportion to the offense committed. Recent developments throughout this and other states disclose conditions which warrant serious consideration of this subject by those charged with the enforcement and execution of the laws. Our law relating to the sale of dope undoubtedly needs amending."

"The maximum penalty for violation of the law should be such that those inclined to this character of traffic may be deterred from temptation and wholesale violations. While I do not favor the calling of a special session, if a special session should be called, the necessity for a proposed amendment to the law regulating the use and sale of dope might well be called to the attention of the legislature."

State Bacteriologist M. L. Holm, who was connected with a Chicago hospital for a number of years where he had ample opportunity to study "dope" cases, says that in dealing with drug habits physicians are chiefly concerned with cocaine and morphine. "The various substitutes for cocaine, such as betaucaine, acolin, halocain, etc., have never become general favorites with drug fiends," said Dr. Holm. "On the other hand the morphine derivatives, especially heroin, as well as diion and perion, have recently come into prominence as satisfactorily replacing the parent drug."

"The drug fiend takes his morphine by mouth and through the hypodermic needle, or smokes opium, while cocaine is either snuffed, injected with the needle or swallowed. A noted cocaine fiend once said that God was unjust in that he made man to live without eating 'coca,' and this sentiment is shared alike by users of morphine and its derivatives."

"No druggist in Michigan may sell morphine or cocaine without a prescription from a legally practicing physician. The same applies to heroin and other derivatives of morphine or cocaine. Such laws are superficial and merely furnish a certain amount of embarrassment to the habitual drug fiend. The confirmed user of cocaine or morphine will beg, steal, lie or commit almost any crime necessary to obtain his drug, and he usually succeeds."

"The treatment of the drug fiend is discouraging. Once the habit is thoroughly established, their consciences are dulled and they lose their self-respect. Frequently one will say 'I cannot have my drug I do not care to live.' When a drug fiend willfully seeks relief from the habit his chances for recovery are more encouraging."

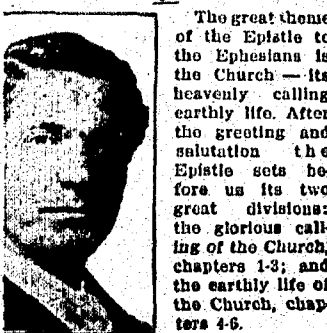

State Forester Marcus Schaaf predicts that Michigan will derive an immense revenue annually from the forest reserves within the next 75 to 100 years, as he claims that the timber lands owned by the commonwealth will be worth approximately $200,000,000 by that time.

Mrs. Lizzie A. Dauchy, whose husband, Edward Dauchy, was killed in the Kellogg Feed Co. factory, at Batavia Creek, settled in circuit court with the company for $400.

The Church: Her Glory and Walk

By REV. WILLIAM EVANS, D. D.
Noble Bible Institute, Chicago

TEXT—Ephesians (whole Epistle).

SYNOPSIS.

Professor Desmond of the Peak observatory causes a great sensation throughout the country by announcing that what appears to be a satellite is approaching at terrific speed. Destruction of the earth is feared.

CHAPTER II.—Continued.

"No, Miss Fulton, nothing more than I have already announced." Silence had fallen at his appearance, abrupt and almost breathless, a silence that came so suddenly that it left mouths open and half uttered words lingering upon lips, but already the spell was rapidly dissipating and a dozen tongues trembling in their eagerness. Then the storm of questions broke. From every side and all at once came exclamations, greetings and swift inquiries as the guests came pressing eagerly forward upon him, but Doris imperiously waving them back silenced them until she had formally presented him to those present whom he had not heretofore met. That over, however, the vocal outburst came again in questions thick and fast, some serious and filled with thought, some frivolous, some nonsensical, yet each tinged with the peculiar intonation of highly strung nerves, for despite their doubts restlessness was strong upon them. For a moment he tried to answer them serially.

"And is there really no hope for us, professor—no hope at all of escaping your sky dragon?"

"Yes, madam. Always where there is life there should be hope."

"I understand that you have stated that this strange wanderer is about the diameter of this state, and appears to be a body complete in itself rather than a giant fragment torn from some mass. Now how do you explain—"

"I beg your pardon, sir. I make no attempt to explain."

"You said it was apparently coming from out of the center of space."

"And so we are, madam. So, also, is everywhere else."

"And you have no consolation what ever to offer us?"

"Yes. If one must die I think it preferable to perish in a collision of worlds rather than by a microbe."

"And you are certain it will annihilate us—destroy us this very evening?"

"I can only hope that my fears are wrong and that you will perish by the microbe after all." He raised his hand appealingly.

"Ladies and gentlemen, please grant me mercy. At present I have nothing to say that you have not already heard. And if you will only be patient a few hours! For if I am correct and we are standing upon the verge of eternity, what matters an attempted explanation at this time? And if I am wrong and we escape, tomorrow will certainly have its tale to unfold."

He stepped backward a pace, bowing, and Judge Fulton taking him by the arm turned upon his guests.

"If you will pardon the professor and myself for a few moments while I show him about the place. It is his first visit here, you know."

Despite their protests that Desmond belonged to them the elder pair wandered away together among the trees, leaving the others in little clusters to resume their speculations or once more take up their lighter talk and restless wanderings.

For the second time that evening Alan found himself temporarily alone with his hostess. She was dressed in pure white—March's favorite color upon her—a quaint heirloom of uncertain history upon her bosom. Her eyes were full of seriousness, her fair skin even a trifle paler than usual as he thought, and her mouth sweetly grave. For while Doris was beyond all question worried and anxious there was no fear in her voice, look or manner.

"And what do you say about it all—this marvelous forecast?" she smiled as they paused. March loved her, she knew it and sometimes took a woman's advantage of a lover's devotion.

"You have always pretended to me that you were so extensively intelligent, you know. I shall not be satisfied until you have settled the whole matter one way or the other." He shook his head helplessly.

"I can say what I think, which is this. I have great respect for Professor Desmond's ability and judgment, yet all mankind is full of error and false reasoning. Therefore, in common with everybody else I can only hope that he is mistaken. By the way, Doris, have I told you yet tonight that I am still in love with you? I really do not remember." She shook her head impatiently.

"Certainly you have—twice—each time we happened to be alone for a moment. And I think it is perfectly absurd of you to make love to me when my head is so full of serious things that I don't hear a word you say about love."

"But you at least heard that much."

"It must have been entirely subconscious and mechanical. You are always making love to me at such ridiculous times and places—for instance when my throat was sore and I could not tell you to stop, and once even in church under your breath when I was trying to listen to a most interesting sermon."

"Call church a ridiculous place?"

"Of course not—except as a place to make love in."

"Yet it is the place of all places for the love knot to be tied in. Then why not an ideal place for the weaving of the skein?"

"You should have said, 'the spinning of the yarn.'"

He picked up the handkerchief which she had dropped, inhaled a breath of its faint fragrance and thrust it into his own bosom. "Another keepsake," he grinned. "That is the way I have to get all of them from you—steal them. However, I will admit that 'skein' was not a good word in that case, for it implies a material easily broken and therefore not suitable for permanently binding people together. I should have said it was an ideal place for the forging of the chain."

"I have no faith whatever in forgers." She turned upon him triumphantly, indicating with her head.

"Anyway, here comes Clay Tolliver and now you will be compelled to behave whether or no." Alan glanced aside.

To his genuine dissatisfaction he saw the only rival who at all worried him approaching them.

Clay raised the shapely fingers to his lips as he always made it a point to do when he greeted her in March's presence, knowing that it worried his opponent in this affair of hearts and taking much satisfaction from the instinctive knowledge that the act of gallantry made the other squirm inwardly. And squirm inwardly March certainly did, not so much at the act itself as from the fact that Doris seemed rather to approve of it, while she should attempt a similar homage he would appear but as an imitator and therefore ridiculous to himself as well as her. "Good evening, Miss Doris," the newcomer said in his low, smooth voice, his dark eyes soft when they gazed at her, hard as brilliant when they flashed over March.

"I have been hoping all day that I might find you looking just as you do this evening." He turned upon her companion, his rather thin but cleanly cut face expressive of a love for the glint of his eyes which Alan had often thought to be the most peculiar he had ever seen. "And I hope you, too, are well, sir." March nodded casually as for a fleeting second their hands and glances met. Clay went on.

"I have to beg your pardon, Miss Doris, for coming here tonight uninvited, but as you know I have been out of town for a week and just came back an hour ago. When I got off the train I learned for the first time that I had been stated by Professor Desmond that a terrible disaster is threatening us, and I immediately came here—not that any mortal could expect to be of any particular physical assistance in case such an inconceivable event should take place, but rather in the hope that I might be of some slight service to you in some other way. And I to be granted your pardon for intruding?" That Doris was genuinely moved by the speaker's sincerity and thoughtfulness March, watching her, could not doubt.

She flashed him a look of gratitude that March would have paid high for.

"Not only are you pardoned, but you are rewarded by my sincere thanks—if that be any reward," she exclaimed impulsively. She dropped a light hand upon the sleeve of each man, smiling from one to the other impartially. "It is difficult to believe that any harm could come to one who had two such knights at her service. It makes a woman feel almost safe, even at an hour like this." She addressed Clay: "By the way, have you met Professor Desmond?" He told her that he had not.

"Then you must do so at once—that is if Mr. March will pardon us for a few moments while I am introducing you. Father has captured him and has him over yonder. Besides, I want you to tell me something about your trip." So off they went with farewell nods to Alan, walking confidently side by side, Doris slender but round, seeming to scarcely touch the grass with her white clad feet, Tolliver of good height and though of slender build showing more than one trace of strength and suppleness in his erect form. Left alone, jealous and disgruntled March thrust his hands to the bottoms of his pockets and joined the first stray group he chanced across.

Immediately he was struck by the subtle change which had come over them in the last quarter of an hour of his companionship along with Doris. Their voices had grown subdued, anxious, strained, with now and then an unnatural laugh that arose unexpectedly as some feminine nerve gave away beneath the suspense. Also he noticed that almost constantly their eyes furtively swept the darkness above. To March it seemed as though the atmosphere of the night was charged with a mysterious oppressiveness. The stillness was that of a cave. Clouds had hung themselves across the sky in a thick curtain and the darkness above was so dense as to seem a solid. Anglo-Saxon of blood, temperament and training, he could walk without a quiver a six-inch steel girder that spanned a canyon hundreds of feet deep and where a loss of nerve or a giddiness meant a plunge to certain death, but now for the first time in his life he was conscious of a strange nervousness and suppressed excitement. The palms of his hands tingled and once he even caught himself laughing idiotically at a comment which he had not even caught the meaning of. Strange sensations ran up and down his back—an irritating pricking as from a light electric current applied to his spine, and when he chanced to turn and see Doris faintly outlined beneath the trees and in close converse with Tolliver his whole being became set on edge at once and his hands tightened spasmodically. He drew himself together.

"Fool!" he muttered in self anger. He always had been rather proud of his self possession during times when that fine quality was at a premium.

"Are you, too, going to lose your nerve, and even before the first symptoms of danger at that? You are becoming as hysterical as Mrs. Emmonds yonder."

A sound from the one whose name he had just mentioned sent him quickly towards her—a middle aged lady who was crossing the lawn with peals of senseless laughter, her highly strung nervous system breaking beneath the suspense of an impending cataclysm so vast that the very mountains themselves would be but mole hills beneath it. He took her firmly by the arm.

"Mrs. Emmonds!" he exclaimed lightly. "Tell me about it also. It seems to be too good a joke to keep to one's self."

She turned a rather vacuous face up at him and laughed again more shrilly than before.

"I am laughing to think how silly I was to be frightened an hour ago over such a ridiculous boy thing as everybody has been chattering about all the evening. As if this earth for which the sun and moon and stars were made could be destroyed by one of those little twinkling things. Look at them!"

She threw her hand upward and Alan followed the movement with his eyes. A ragged rift had been torn in the clouds and through the gap he could see the myriads of the Milky Way, innumerable in size, faint in their light as far distant glow worms. Once more her senseless laugh arose.

"And as for the Lord who created this great world out of darkness and then built the rest of creation that we might be able to see by night as well as by day would set two worlds battering at each other like senseless sheep! And besides does not the Bible say that the earth shall be destroyed next time by fire? How silly I was to be afraid of such nonsense. I am as bad as a child who fears that there is a goblin beneath his bed."

Her convulsive peals of merriment had turned all eyes in her direction and a dozen men were now upon their way towards her. Alan was still tugging at her arm.

"Of course, Mr. Emmonds, quite true—undoubtedly so. I fully agree with you that there can be no danger." He stopped speaking abruptly, the cold goose flesh breaking out all over him, for beneath his feet he seemed to feel the earth shudder like an overdriven engine. Or was it his own nerves after all? He turned his face towards his companions beyond.

One glance told him that they had felt it also, for in their eyes was a wildness such as he had never before seen in human beings, a fear that no savage horde bearing down upon them with naked weapons could have inspired. Rather it was the grisly terror of those who have wandered far into the evil haunts of the nightmare; the sweating horror of humanity who believe themselves to be at the mercy of the supernatural. Then the earth shudder ceased and they stood staring at each other with faces that were dazed and blanched. Alan suddenly realized that he was supporting the dead weight of a fainting woman and lowered her gently to the grass.

"The first slight convulsion," said a quiet voice, and all eyes turned upon the speaker. It was Professor Desmond, and though his face was pale as well as theirs he was by far the most composed one of those present—not necessarily by virtue of superior courage although he was a brave man.

"And what will come next?" asked a hollow voice. The scientist shrugged his shoulders.

"No person upon earth can tell. But you had best be prepared for more convulsions, perhaps terrific earthquakes that may topple over the very mountains, perhaps violent electrical disturbances, likely enough winds of unheard of velocity—no man can do more than guess, for no man in the world's history ever went through a thing like this. Also it is possible that an approaching body may strike almost without further physical warning, and that we will have but a few seconds of actual atmospheric or ground disturbances before we are buried beneath a mountain of organic matter."

"And what will happen to the earth itself?"

"Again none can tell. The impact may crush its crust and release floods of molten matter. Or the crust may remain intact and the smaller and less dense body—if such be the case—be smashed to powder upon its surface. It even may knock the world from its course, itself to become a lost projectile whirling through space and a menace to other worlds. Or our planet may continue upon its way undisturbed save for the inevitable destruction which must be caused for a great distance around the region actually smitten. It is all but a matter of guess work. Ah—"

Beneath their feet there ran once more the tremor of the earth as it vibrated like the deck of a racing steamship. To their ears, at first almost indistinguishable but ever increasing in volume until it sounded like the drone of a great hive of bees, came a throbbing as of a powerful steam pump. From several blocks distant where the region from which Desmond had fled came faint yells of terror and in a nearby stable a horse screamed horribly. Alan dropping upon his knees beside the prostrate woman saw some of his companions throw themselves upon their faces with their arms wrapped about their heads, while others quietly sank to a kneeling position with hands clasped and faces lifted. A number of the men remained erect, but these stood staring upward in a dazed manner or walked uncertainly about with hands clenched and faces twitching. Desmond alone of all of them stood like a statue, his arms folded upon his breast, his face raised, his whole poise calm and dignified. A score of yards away Doris stood upright beside Clay with her hand tightly clutching his sleeve. Of all the women she was by far the most composed, neither crying aloud nor weeping silently, while Tolliver was as rigid as the tree against which he leaned and half encircled with his arm to steady himself.

And then from overhead there burst upon their ears a roar low and hoarse as the voice of a distant but raging sea, a roar that steadily arose to the mighty voice of a Niagara or the roar of a battlefield wherein all human voices were drowned as the cataclysm of battlefield drowns the squeak of mice. The earth rocked as a cradle, and Alan rising with difficulty to his feet, and starting towards Doris with a wild impulse of protection was nearly blown away bodily by a gust of wind that swept by voicelessly in the deafening thunder from above. Recovering his balance he pushed his way forward. Tolliver's arm was about her now, the other hugging the tree, and by the electric lights of the street Alan could see the strange light which blazed in the other's eyes and in that moment would have sworn that Clay was insane. Doris, seeing him coming, wrested herself from the one who held her and was blown bodily into his arms. Her lips were moving and he knew that she was trying to make herself heard, but not the slightest sound could be caught from her lips. Closely he clasped her, trying in his turn to shout words of encouragement into her ears.

Another blast, spinning them about, nearly blew them apart and they instinctively sank upon the ground side by side, clutching each other and gasping for breath. In a wink the electric lights went out and all became darkness, a cavernous darkness filled with cyclonic winds, earth quiverings, throbbings and a roar so mighty that it seemed to crowd all space. Then the wind ceased and from above there sank upon them a mighty weight, soft and yielding as if they had been buried beneath a great heap of feathers, a weight which nevertheless seemed about to force the blood from their nostrils, and beneath it both man and woman felt their senses reel. Then as the darkness of oblivion came settling upon their brains the pressure gradually grew less, vanished altogether and they found themselves struggling for breath in an absence of air where a moment before their lives were being crushed out by its terrific compression. Gasping like fish upon a bank they threw themselves upon their faces as they fought vainly for breath until with myriads of lights flashing before their eyes consciousness left them and they lay motionless.

CHAPTER III.

The Flying Man.

It was perhaps five minutes later that Alan came into a certain pos-sion of his senses, not fully as one may do who awakens from a faint, but rather with a gradual return to normal understanding through which period he had grotesque dreams, saw visions and seemed to exist for long periods in unfamiliar worlds. Then as full consciousness became his again he sat up. There was a strong wind blowing once more, a gale in fact, but it was now coming steadily instead of in gigantic gusts and the roar from above had diminished to the long, dull rumble of dying thunder. All was yet in darkness so dense that he could not see his hand before his face.

For a moment he sat quietly as his brain tried to grasp the full significance of all that had happened, his name, his whereabouts, the cause of the blackness, the roar and the wind.

Rapidly They Searched the Grounds.

Ah, he had it now. The collision. It had evidently taken place and he was still alive—Doris! His heart leaped to his throat and he went tumbling over the ground on his hands and knees in blind search for her. His touch felt upon her still lying prostrate, and placing his arm under her he raised her to a sitting position, feeling of her face as he did so. Thank all things she was alive and now even able to move a bit. He drew her gently to him until her head rested against his shoulder where he held her with his arm clasped about her waist. He could feel the deep and rapid pulsing of her bosom and knew that she was breathing spasmodically as though greatly exhausted, realizing for the first time that he, also, was panting as after a severe race. He spoke to her with an effort and after a few fruitless trials succeeded in making himself heard. He asked her if she was much hurt or in pain and she shook her head against his shoulder in a negative.

He became conscious that something to which it seemed he had always been accustomed had suddenly absented itself and for a moment pondered vaguely as to what it could be. Oh yes, the roar! It was gone now, the earth was steady beneath them and the wind almost dead. What had become of the others of the party? He must see at once. He found that Doris was now able to sit upright without assistance, told her to remain where she was until he returned, and got upon his feet. As he did so he saw a light flicker a short distance away and a moment later the flame of a Japanese lantern revealed the set face of Desmond. Alan went hurrying up to him.

"What you have said is undoubtedly true, yet at the same time there may be serious riots as the result of a happening like this. Gangs of vandals are apt to form after great panics while the people are still dazed, and taking advantage of conditions commit all sorts of depredations—as for instance in times of armed attacks upon cities or after great fires or floods. Therefore at such times it is a man's first duty to look out for those nearest and dearest to him. We have quite a number of women here, wives, daughters and perhaps a sweetheart or two, and most of us should remain with them until we know that it is safe to leave them alone. Let me count. I find that there are sixteen ladies and fourteen gentlemen present. Of the latter I should imagine that half might be spared for a scouting party while the rest remained here for the time being as an emergency guard. As soon as the scouts report that it is safe for the ladies to go upon the streets we can send for carriages, cars or vehicles of some sort and escort them to their homes. Meanwhile I beg of you to restrain your natural anxiety for a brief half hour for the benefit of all concerned. We will now cast the ballot to determine who shall go forth and who shall stay."

Jim was a new porter in the hotel, and he was putting in his first night at his new and responsible position. It was five in the morning, and so Jim had done all he was told, and was getting on splendidly.

"Call 17 at 4," commanded the night clerk as he looked over his call sheet. Jim obeyed. After he had been gone for a considerable time the clerk went up to see if he had called the rooms designated.

"Well," sighed the new porter, whom he found on the third floor, "I've got seventeen of 'em up, but I haven't started on the other four yet."—National Food Magazine.

TORTURING TWINGES

Much so-called rheumatism is caused by weakened kidneys. When the kidneys fail to clear the blood of uric acid, the acid forms into crystals like bits of broken glass in the muscles, joints and on the nerve casings. Torturing pains dart through the affected part whenever it is moved. By curing the kidneys, Doan's Kidney Pills have eased thousands of rheumatic cases, lumbago, sciatica, gravel, neuralgia and urinary disorders.

AN ILLINOIS CASE

Charles Easter, 22 Walnut St., Waukegan, Ill., says: "I had sciatic rheumatism and kidney trouble for years. I was laid up for months and spent hundreds of dollars unsuccessfully for doctors' treatment. After hope had fled, Doan's Kidney Pills came to my aid. They cured the awful misery and I have never suffered since."

"And what do you say about it all—this marvelous forecast?" she smiled as they paused. March loved her, she knew it and sometimes took a woman's advantage of a lover's devotion.

"You have always pretended to me that you were so extensively intelligent, you know. I shall not be satisfied until you have settled the whole matter one way or the other." He shook his head helplessly.

"I can say what I think, which is this. I have great respect for Professor Desmond's ability and judgment, yet all mankind is full of error and false reasoning. Therefore, in common with everybody else I can only hope that he is mistaken. By the way, Doris, have I told you yet tonight that I am still in love with you? I really do not remember." She shook her head impatiently.

"Certainly you have—twice—each time we happened to be alone for a moment. And I think it is perfectly absurd of you to make love to me when my head is so full of serious things that I don't hear a word you say about love."

"But you at least heard that much."

"It must have been entirely subconscious and mechanical. You are always making love to me at such ridiculous times and places—for instance when my throat was sore and I could not tell you to stop, and once even in church under your breath when I was trying to listen to a most interesting sermon."

"Call church a ridiculous place?"

"Of course not—except as a place to make love in."

"Yet it is the place of all places for the love knot to be tied in. Then why not an ideal place for the weaving of the skein?"

"You should have said, 'the spinning of the yarn.'"

He picked up the handkerchief which she had dropped, inhaled a breath of its faint fragrance and thrust it into his own bosom. "Another keepsake," he grinned. "That is the way I have to get all of them from you—steal them. However, I will admit that 'skein' was not a good word in that case, for it implies a material easily broken and therefore not suitable for permanently binding people together. I should have said it was an ideal place for the forging of the chain."

"I have no faith whatever in forgers." She turned upon him triumphantly, indicating with her head.

Avoid Sedative Cough Medicine

If you want to contribute directly to the occurrence of capillary bronchitis and pneumonia use cough medicine containing codeine, morphine, heroin and other sedatives when you have a cough or cold. An expectorant like Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is what is needed. That cleans out the culture beds or breeding places for the germs of pneumonia and other germ diseases.

That is why pneumonia never results from a cold when Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is used. It contains no morphine or other sedatives. For sale by all dealers.

The lady's maids of Chicago are about to form a union and strike against some grievances, which many sympathizers will regard as very real. They are rebelling against interminable hooking up of gowns, late hours and dog nursing. A domestic service union, with strikes on one side and indignant but helpless mistresses on the other, will add vastly to the gaiety of nations, that is to the portion of the national contingent who will not be requisitioned to do the hooking up and wash the dogs.

The duchess of Marlborough advises British mothers that "a dinner well cooked is better antidote for drink than any possible legislation." Without going into the actual verity of the aphorism, it is pertinent to suggest that the noble duchess proceed to the real antidote by personally teaching the British mothers to prepare a dinner well cooked.

Chronic Dyspepsia

The following unsolicited testimonial should certainly be sufficient to give hope and courage to person afflicted with chronic dyspepsia: "I have been a chronic dyspeptic for years, and of all medicine I have taken Chamberlain's Tablets have done me more good than anything else," says W.
